Not illustrated. 1906 edition. Excerpt: ...Unprotected, too, says Hardenberg, waggin his fool head. An so young! Holy Geronimo! I dont know what more fool drivelin they had, but they finly comes away. Ally Bazan and me rounds em up and conducts em to the boat an puts em to bed like as if they was little--or drunk, an the next day--or next night, rather--about one oclock, we slips the heel ropes and hobbles o the schooner quiet as a mountainlion stalking a buck, and catches the out-tide through the gate o the bay. Lord, we was some keyed up, lemme tell you, an Ally Bazan and Hardenberg was at the fore end o the boat with their guns ready in case o bein asked impertnent questions by the patrolboats. Well, how-some-ever, we nips out with the little Jokers (they was writ in the manifest as minin pumps) an starts south. This ere pasear down to Gortamalar is the first time I goes a-gallying about on what the Three Crows calls blue water; and when that schooner hit the bar I begins to remember that my stummick and inside arrangements aint made o no chilled steel, nor yet o rawhide. First I gits plum sad, and shivery, and I feels as mean an pore as a prairie-dog wich as eat a horned toad backards. I goes to Ally Bazan and gives it out as how Im going for to die, an I puts it up that Im sure sad and depressedlike; an dont care much about life nohow; an that present surroundins lack that certain undescribable charm. I tells him that I knows the ship is goin to sink afore we git over the bar. Waves!--they was highern the masts; and Ive rode some fair lively sun-fishers in my time, but I aint never struck anythin like the rarin and buckin and high-an-lofty tumblin that that same boat went through with those first few hours after we had come...
